PANEL TWO: THE “END” OF TRADITIONAL PARADIGMS ASSOCIATED WITH FEDERAL ENVIRONMENTAL LAW

This panel will probe the ongoing relevance of methodological paradigms that have preoccupied scholars and practitioners of environmental law for past decades: command and control versus market-based regulation, planning and negotiation approaches, and various permutations of environmental federalism. This panel will also discuss what (and who) is “in” and what (and who) is “out” and what is likely to take its place.

Moderator: Mia Montoya Hammersley, Healthy Communities Law Fellow, Earthjustice

- ▶ Dan Farber, Sho Sato Professor of Law, Berkeley Law, University of California, Faculty Director, Center for Law, Energy and the Environment
- ▶ David Adelman, Harry Reasoner Regents Chair in Law, University of Texas School of Law
- ▶ Justin Pidot, Professor of Law, University of Denver Sturm College of Law

12–1:30 LUNCH/KEYNOTE SPEAKER (Lewis Roca Rothgerber Christie Lobby)

- ▶ Len Necefer, Assistant Professor in American Indian Studies Program & Udall Center for Public Policy, University of Arizona

1:30–2:45 PANEL THREE: WHAT “ENDS” SHOULD WE BE AIMING FOR?

This panel will examine what should be our goal, sustainability or resilience? And if it is resilience, resilience of what? What sorts of regulatory approaches should we promote? What industries? What level of government? What type of infrastructure, how permanent, and where we will get the energy?

Moderator: Logan Cooper, Student and EIC of the Arizona Journal of Environmental Law & Policy, University of Arizona College of Law
